Fifty-Eighth

FOUNDER'S DAY OBSERVED

OCTOBER 5, 1950

Thousands of Woman's College Alumnae heard the fifty-eighth anniversary of the opening of Woman's College observed Thursday, October 5, at 8 o'clock in Aycock Auditorium with Chancellor E. K. Graham making the main address.

The program was broadcast by seventeen radio stations in North and South Carolina and was originated by WFMY Greensboro News-Record Radio Station. Simultaneous alumnae meetings were held in forty-two counties of North Carolina and eleven places outside of the State.

Mrs. Julius Cone (Laura Weill '10) presided and opened the program with greetings to the alumnae radio audience. Dr. Warren Ashby, head of the department of philosophy at Woman's College, read the Scripture and gave the prayer. Dr. W. C. Jackson, who was Chancellor of Woman's College until his retirement June 30, 1950, and is at present professor of history, read the Litany, written by Josephine Hege '27. Responses to the Litany and music for the occasion were given by the Woman's College Choir of 165 voices under the direction of George M. Thompson. The College Song closed the program.

Following the program in Aycock Auditorium the Greensboro Alumnae Chapter held open house in the Alumnae House for several hundred faculty and alumnae. Carroll Stoker '39 is president of the Greensboro Alumnae Chapter.

FIRST FOUNDERS DAY

It is interesting to note that Founder's Day was first observed on October 12, 1910. The Board of Directors of State Normal and Industrial College decided on that date for the first observance "because that was the Founder's Day of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and the date the City of Greensboro was founded," according to the Raleigh News and Observer October 11, 1910.

The next year, President J. I. Foust announced that Founder's Day would be observed October 5, 1911, because that date was the anniversary of the opening of the State Normal and Industrial College in 1892. According to Dr. McIver's first report to the Board of Directors in 1893, the opening date of the new college was originally set for September 28, 1892 but due to delay in getting some of the necessary equipment, college did not open until October 5. Since 1911 Founder's Day has been observed on or near October 5.

TALK NEEDED

This is a Legislative Year and Woman's College needs the support and backing of every Alumna.

We Alumnae know what a Woman's College education means. We believe in our College and we want her to continue to give to the young women who come to W. C. the education for citizenship which they need.

We are counting on you to impress upon your elected Representatives and Senators the importance of a favorable vote on the appropriations requested for our College. Talk to your friends in your community; talk to your representatives. Talk Woman's College.

THE DREAM AND THE COMMITMENT

by EDWARD KIDDER GRAHAM

Address delivered at Founder's Day Exercises in Aycock Auditorium, Thursday, October 5, 1950, at 8:00 p. m.

Fifty-eight years ago this day, the Woman's College broke with a tradition honored among institutions of higher learning. We broke with tradition by getting off to an excellent start. The long battle to establish the College had been fought and won by President McIver, and, through the force of his leadership and his logic, its place had been made more secure with the People of the State of North Carolina.

A place here had been made secure for Miss Mary Stanford of Orange County, for example, who arrived on October 5, 1892, along with 175 other girls of roughly her own age and inclinations. Mary Stanford had, we may safely assume, left her home some miles west of Chapel Hill rather early that morning, full of high hopes, the spirit of adventure, and a good country breakfast. Some cinder-filled hours later she was getting off the train at the foot of Elm Street, to be met by President McIver. The long ride out to the College brought her to ten unlikely acres and two buildings.

It brought her also into contact with the heart of the College—its faculty. The heart she found was a stout one: men and women representing such institutions as Wellesley, Peabody, the University of North Carolina, the Woman's Medical College of Philadelphia, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Outside of the classroom, Mary Stanford's existence was securely hedged about by the civilizing presence of Miss Sue Kirkland, Lady Principal, and Referee in Matters Social and Domestic. There were good days ahead.

A plant adequate in its time, a faculty distinguished for its later achievement—these things Mary Stanford could see. There was, of course, something else. There was a dream, unseen and unspoken, but permeating the entire College. It was this dream that had fired Mr. McIver in his travels about the State, and had inspired him as his voice was heard by girls like Mary Stanford.

As to the elements of the dream, first of all the idea of the living union between the College and the People of North Carolina runs like a radiant silver thread through the brief and luminous career of President McIver. It was born of his love for North Carolina and confirmed by his faith in the education of women as vital to a dynamic democracy, a living union which would bring the resources of the College to our homes, our farms, and our communities.

Another element in the dream was the idea of combining liberal and practical education—a significant and prophetic factor in the mission of the College—a combination of liberal and practical education not only on the same campus, but also in the same human being. Languages and literature, history, the physical sciences, the natural sciences, the fine arts, education, secretarial science, home economics—this was the program of study offered in the beginning. According to the catalog (a remarkably lucid document by the standard of college and university catalogs in later years), "It is the purpose of the Institution to give such education as will add to the efficiency of the average woman in whatever walk of life her lot may be cast."

In his report on the tenth anniversary of the opening, President McIver makes it quite clear that he had in mind not just the education of women in selected disciplines, or the education of women for specific careers, but the education of women for a very high order of citizenship, built upon liberal and practical studies, to be sure, but deriving its force and its stamina from a commitment to a very few permeating values.

These values he saw as springing from the genius, or the spirit, of the place—truth and the love of truth, justice, tolerance, the discipline of free men and women, self-reliance, independence of spirit, the habit and the pride of responsibility, faith in human dignity and progress, belief in God.

According to President McIver, "The worth of a strong college to a student is not, as some suppose, the mere fact that it gives the opportunity to a student to perform systematic literary tasks assigned by teachers, or that it gives opportunity to work in laboratories and libraries. These are necessary and important, but the student's greatest advantage at college is the spiritual and mental atmosphere of the place. It is intangible, but you can feel it. It can not be measured, but its effect is everywhere manifest."

A philosophy of this sort, the third element of the dream, involved a commitment on the part of the entire College and its students, a commitment growing out of a highly developed sense of community on the campus. It transcended concern over departmental organization, special prerogative, or isolation of knowledge in restricted fields.

Doubtless this sense of community was easier to effect in the 1890's than in a more sophisticated age of specialization. The faculty itself showed a certain refreshing versatility. For example, President McIver taught Government and Pedagogics (a word in common use until some pioneer taught us how to spell Education with a capital E); Edwin A. Alderman taught History and English Literature; Miss Gertrude Mendenhall taught Mathematics and German; J. Y. Joyner taught American Literature and Methods of Teaching Arithmetic; and Miss Dixie Lee Bryant taught Geology, Biology, and Physical Geography. It is to be noted, perhaps a little wistfully, that Miss Sue May Kirkland, the Lady Principal, taught Habits and Manners.

I should not want to suggest that this amazing combination of skills and responsibilities can or should be duplicated today. But the curriculum of 1892 clearly points up the fact that the concept of the College as an intellectual community was firmly embedded in the minds of those who taught here and those who learned here. The idea of relatedness among the various fields of knowledge was accepted as a matter of course, as was the concept of a well-rounded liberal education as part of the academic birthright of every student, regardless of her ultimate choice of a profession. It was at the heart of the Founder's dream of what the College ought to be.

Through the years, the College has grown with the State. Under the firm administration of Julius I. Foust, the campus reached its present physical dimension of 166 acres. Under his leadership, there was developed a plan to accommodate a student body that in his time became ten times as large as in Mary Stanford's day.

Under the guiding hand of Walter Clinton Jackson, scholar and educational statesman, the present educational dimensions of the College were attained, and there was secured the great building program of recent years designed for the largest student body in our history.

Some fifty-eight years after Mary Stanford came to the Woman's College, another Orange County girl, Dorothy Hogan, heard the call. I take her as an example largely for sentimental reasons, because this is a sentimental occasion. Her father was a student under my father at Chapel Hill, and I find a very warm satisfaction—embodying all of the elements of humility and gratitude for my own invitation to join the faculty of the Woman's College—in the fact that Dorothy Hogan is with us now.

Dorothy Hogan, we may safely assume, left her Orange County home a few miles from the old Stanford place only an hour or so before the family car deposited her at Jamison Hall. She encountered a teaching faculty of 204 instead of the inspired few who broke the ground these many years past, and she found herself part of a student body of 2428 young women. For her education over the next four years, there were classrooms, dormitories, laboratories, and service buildings which would cost upwards of 30 million dollars to replace. These things have been provided through the wisdom of those who have gone before, and through the faith of the State in its Woman's College.

And the end is not yet. The College, like the law, must be stable, but she must not stand still. This is implicit in the dream. The combination of liberal and practical education, the idea of relatedness, the commitment to the permeating values for which the College stands, and in the view of the College as a community of dedicated human beings, is above all a dynamic concept. It is based squarely on the premise that the daughters of our State must be educated for citizenship in their time.

This brings us face to face with what we propose to do for Dorothy Hogan and for thousands like her. We recognize that the role of the College in preparation for the professions must be emphasized. These things—like the College—are of this world, and education for effective careers is a part of our obligation to students who follow professional programs. We firmly hold, however, that the education of the true professional—as distinguished from the training of the journeyman—must include basic understandings and skills to make for effectiveness not only as professional but also as citizen.

Education in this sense requires an understanding of the cultural ancestry of our western civilization, of our spiritual and moral roots in Palestine and Greece. It requires an understanding of American politics and traditions. It requires exposure to the best in literature and to the best in fine arts, to what Sir Richard Livingston has called "the habitual vision of great ideals." It requires a thoroughgoing experience in the principles of reasoning, the intellectual method. It requires the development of skills in the arts of communication—speaking, writing, reading, and listening. It requires an understanding of the physical world, and the living world of biology of which we are a part.

In a time when anxiety threatens the stability basic to the political health of a free people, when our free institutions are threatened by our own unrest and uncertainty as directly as by a totalitarian force without God and without a moral precept, we have the exacting obligation of providing here the sort of liberal education which will develop within the individual human being—to the limit of her resources—the ability to make sound value judgments.

As thus conceived, liberal education today calls for a rededication to the dream of the Founder—commitment to the living union between the College and the State; belief in the relatedness of the various fields of knowledge in the education of the human being; commitment to basic values; community of spirit among the faculty, among the student body, and now among that great element which was not present in 1892—our 26,000 living alumnae. It is within this concept that we shall develop to the utmost of our ability the resources of the College and bring these resources effectively to bear in the life of the State and its people.

The dream of our yesterday is the measure of our present, and the hope of our tomorrow.

Mr. Gordon Gray is Inaugurated President of Consolidated University

The inauguration of Mr. Gordon Gray as President of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, October 8, 9, and 10 was an occasion marked with dignity.

Festivities were begun at Woman's College Sunday, October 8, at 11:00 A. M. in Aycock Auditorium. Dr. Harold Tribble, president of Wake Forest College, gave the Inaugural Sermon entitled "Light Incarnate and Invincible." Mr. R. B. House, chancellor of the University at Chapel Hill, read the Litany which was written for the occasion by Dr. Richard Bardolph, of the Woman's College Department of History. Music for the Litany was adapted by George M. Thompson of the Woman's College music faculty, and the music was by the Woman's College Choir, under Mr. Thompson's direction.

Following luncheon for guests and delegates in Spencer Dining Hall, Chancellor E. K. Graham presided at the afternoon session in Aycock Auditorium at three o'clock, the theme of which was "Higher Education and the Human Spirit." Dr. Helen Maud Cam, professor at Harvard University spoke for the historian and Dr. Arthur H. Compton, Chancellor of Washington University, St. Louis, Missouri, spoke for the scientist.

Dinner for guests and delegates in Spencer Dining Hall concluded the first day's events.

AT CHAPEL HILL

At Memorial Hall, Chapel Hill, Monday at 10:00 o'clock, Dr. George D. Stoddard, president of the University of Illinois discussed "The Responsibilities of the University to Its State" and Dr. James L. Morrill, president of the University of Minnesota's subject was "The Responsibilities of the State to Its University."

Buffet luncheon for delegates and guests was served in Morehead Planetarium.

At the afternoon session also in Memorial Hall, Dr. Lee Alvin DuBridg, president of the California Institute of Technology, spoke on "Science and the Spirit of Freedom."

The dinner in Lenoir Hall for delegates and guests was presided over by Mr. William B. Umstead, chairman of the Trustees Committee on the Inauguration. After dinner speeches by Governor Kerr Scott and Senator Frank Graham were highlights of the occasion. Immediately following the dinner, the guests, delegates and alumni were invited to Morehead Planetarium to be presented to President and Mrs. Gray. Refreshments were served in the Faculty Lounge, The University Room and in the private dining room. Members of the Consolidated University Student Council assisted at the reception.

AT STATE COLLEGE

The inauguration ceremony in the Reynolds Coliseum, State College, Raleigh, North Carolina, was most impressive and the academic procession very colorful.

Greetings were brought from the University world by Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase, Chancellor of New York University; from the Colleges and Universities in North Carolina by Dr. Arthur Hollis Edens, President of Duke University; from the Public Schools of North Carolina by Mr. Clyde A. Erwin, State Superintendent of Public Instruction; from the Alumni and Alumnae of the Consolidated University of North Carolina by Mrs. John Sockwell, Jr., President of the Alumnae Association of Woman's College; from the Students of the Consolidated University of North Carolina by Henry Odum, President of the Consolidated University Student Council; and from the faculties of the Consolidated University of North Carolina by Dr. Robert E. Coker, Kenan Professor of Zoology of University of North Carolina.

The combined Glee Clubs of Woman's College, State College and University of North Carolina under the direction of George M. Thompson of Woman's College music faculty sang "Dear Land of Home" (from Finlandia) by Jean Sibelius.

President Gordon Gray was presented by Mr. W. D. Carmichael, Jr., Comptroller of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, and Judge William Devin, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, administered the oath of office. The induction into office was by Governor W. Kerr Scott.

The full text of Mr. Gray's Inaugural Address appears elsewhere in the magazine.

"God of Our Fathers," by G. W. Warren, was sung by the Inauguration Choir, and the assemblage, accompanied by the State College and University of North Carolina bands under the direction of Joel Carter.

Reverend Howard E. Rondthaler, Bishop of the Moravian Church, Winston-Salem, pronounced the benediction.

Building at Woman's College Progresses

The year is coming to a close with three building projects under way at Woman's College and a third nearing completion.

Erection of the Student Union, addition of two wings to the Science Building, and the remodeling and expansion of Curry School Building are in the early stages. The new Home Economics Building is nearing completion and will be used next semester, while the old Home Economics Building is to be remodeled to become a wing of the new structure.

An additional project involves landscaping in the area surrounding the new Library and the Home Economics Building, and the relocation of a driveway at the north end of College Avenue. More than a million dollars are involved in the current projects.

President Gordon Gray's Inaugural Address

(Editorial Note: This is the inaugural address of President Gordon Gray of the Consolidated University of North Carolina which was delivered in the Coliseum of N. C. State College in Raleigh, N. C., at noon Tuesday, October 10, at final exercises of the three-day program. Exercises were held Sunday at Woman's College at Greensboro, and Monday at the University at Chapel Hill.)

This is the third of three days devoted to convocations and ceremonies which should be considered more as tribute to past institutional glories and as a promise for future hope than as the recognition of the assumption of new responsibilities by an individual. There should be little left to say at this time, other than that we now accept the inherited strength of the ages and acknowledge our obligation to posterity.

The prayers and the expressed wisdom of illustrious guests for the past two days and the eloquent solemnity of the moment should make unnecessary the addition of another voice.

However, there are demands historically made upon the President of an institution of higher learning at the time of his installation. Among them is that of having him record himself as to his and its responsibilities—in this case on a tripartite basis—the opportunities of his state and region, and, indeed, a clear, concise solution for all the problems of the universe—making him a sort of academic Atlas even before he has become accustomed to the weight of his robe upon his shoulders.

After two weeks of prestine confusions, I am expected to articulate for a group of my peers—students, faculty, delegates, and the entire constituency—how a University should be managed, its purpose and function, the aspirations of the people it serves, and a passing but complete blue print for world peace and prosperity. Better had this be done upon retirement.

The fact that I submit here today is testimony to my conformist tendencies, for, had I followed the advice of many of my colleagues who have had a similar experience given earnestly, if not hopefully, you would have been treated to the greatest eloquence of all: silence.

In this, then, can my own associates and those generally jealous of and zealous for academic tradition take comfort. My first really official appearance has certain slavish aspects. Here, therefore, is no young recalcitrant. Indeed, here in a sense is prostration in the face of tradition.

Unfortunately, the management of our nation and the conduct of our affairs today cannot be dictated by traditional forms and procedures. Some of the easy protections of the past, afforded by geography, principally are not now with us.

It seems evident that no longer can an institution of learning have truly cloistered halls. Nor can there be any such thing as an isolated village.

The mechanical genius of man has been able so to compress time and shrink space that we find ourselves all world citizens. The inhabitants of the State of North Carolina from Manteo to Murphy might easily, except for the convenience of the Post Office Department, be domiciled with United Nations at Lake Success, in so far as the impact of world events on their lives is concerned.

Any meaningful reference to the world at this moment in history must be a reference to what we know as the free world; for, indeed, there are two worlds living physically if not peacefully side by side.

This is the principal fact of life which unhappily must serve as the backdrop for all of our living, planning, hoping, praying.

It is vital that we as North Carolinians and as Americans have an awareness of our national obligations, capacities and commitments, as well as those on the state and local level. Our country now has by reason of circumstance attained a position of world leadership which expresses itself in military, economic, political, spiritual, and psychological terms. This necessity to assume leadership arises not only out of our great physical and human resources but from the illimitable reserves of our spirit as a people and from our growing democratic institutions and forms and from our own peculiar cultures.

While we recognize that our institutions and cultures have made us great, we do not seek to force them upon any other people of the earth; yet they continue to serve as the basis for courage and determination of the freedom loving people everywhere.

We must preserve them as the hope of the free world.

We must continue to accept the responsibilities of leadership, which means that we must be strong economically. We must maintain an adequate military posture, and assist our friends in building up their military strength in an effort to deter aggression and avoid the immeasurable consequences of a World War III. Our diplomatic leadership must be sound and just and our economic statesmanship enlightened.

Most of all perhaps, we must communicate to the free people of the world and to those who aspire to become free the meaning of the democratic dream; we must make clear that it is our desire that the democratic dream be not just an idea, but a way of life.

This leadership must be firm and yet must be sensible. We should at all times appraise our commitments and assess them against our capabilities, for to over-commit would present the tragedy of weakness born of attempting to share our strength.

Americans and Southerners and North Carolinians must understand these things.

For the reason that the world as we know it is divided against itself, it is vital that the elements of the free half of the world move towards the basis of mutual trust and help. We must understand one another, but we must also interpret the meaning of the kind of world in which we find ourselves.

Harriet Elliott Social Science Forum

by A. A. WILKINSON

"Public Opinion in a Democracy" was the subject of the Fourth Annual Harriet Elliott Social Science Forum held at Woman's College, November 16, 17 and 18. Representatives from many Southern and Eastern Colleges participated in the event with students, faculty and alumnae of Woman's College.

The American people are not easy marks for propagandists when it comes to important issues. Dr. Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr., Harvard historian and Pulitzer prize-winning author declared on November 16 at the opening of the Fourth Social Science Forum. When relatively minor issues are involved, such as the selection of a toothpaste or laundry soap, he said, influence of persuasive advertising is considerable.

There is, he declared, the lesson of history to prove that the force of events and political leadership are more important in shaping public opinion than the conscious manipulation of propagandistic techniques by pressure groups or factions. Schlesinger cited the change in American ideas about the business community that was brought about by the depression, and the complete sweep of the pendulum from isolationism to preparedness and war, brought about by the aggression of totalitarian powers. These changes were made at a deep level of public reaction independent of propaganda, he declared.

Schlesinger was followed on the forum program, to discuss the general topic of "Public Opinion in a Democracy" by three other specialists, Dr. Charles A. Siepmann, New York University radio and communications expert; Dr. Robert K. Merton, Columbia University Professor of Sociology; and Dr. Hadley Cantril, public opinion research specialist of Princeton University. These three spokesmen were not so convinced as Dr. Schlesinger was that the men and agencies that control the press, the radio, and the films do not have a tremendous influence in shaping public opinion.

Dr. Merton said that American citizens do not have a wholly free market in ideas. Public opinion, he said, is hedged in by restraints that are so common and seem so right that we fail to recognize them as restraints. Only in theory, he said, is every one free to say what he wishes; economic limitations prevent many opinions from being voiced. Merton sees a danger in the increasing community monopoly of press and radio, the decrease in the number of newspapers and their control by fewer people. He also decried the use of the fear motive by advertisers.

The American people, said Dr. Cantril in his appearances at the forum, recognize that our responsibility in the world is to make the ultimate decisions. Consequently, we are tense while Europeans are less so in their sad resignation that whatever happens they can't help it.

There is a growing danger that the American people may see education retarded by a decline in the use of the printed word, Dr. Siepmann ventured. Printed education, he said, is losing out to oral education, while television threatens to separate people even more from sound reading habits. "If this continues," he asserted, "we shall soon be a nation more illiterate than ever." Dr. Siepmann also expressed the fear that pressure groups may exert unwarranted influence upon public opinion. Yet, he said, the final arbiter of what goes on in the world of communication is the person communicated to, that rival forces contending for power are extremely sensitive to reaction.

"The conflict of pressure groups is a symptom of health in the market place of thought. This is the very nature of democracy," he said.

Dr. Eugene Pfaff, of the history faculty, is chairman of the Social Science Forum Committee.

Mrs. Flora White Edwards Dies November 23, 1950

Mrs. Flora White Edwards, associate professor of home economics at the Woman's College until her retirement in 1945 because of ill health, died November 23, at the High Point Memorial Hospital, after two months of critical illness.

Mrs. Edwards was born March 6, 1889, in Randolph County, the daughter of Roxie Dixon and William Alpheus White. Her parents moved to the Guilford College community when Mrs. Edwards was a young child.

She received her A.B. degree from Guilford College, her B.S. degree from George Peabody College for Teachers, and her M.S. degree from the University of Chicago.

She was an assistant in the Chemistry Department at Woman's College in 1916, taught at Pineland School for Girls, Salemburg, and was Instructor and Professor of Foods and Nutrition at Woman's College from 1929 to her retirement in 1945.

In 1917 she was married to Edgar Philmore Edwards of Carthage, N. C., who at the time of their marriage was in business in Spartanburg, S. C., where they lived until his death in 1920.

She is survived by one daughter, Betty Philmore Edwards Loesing, of Fort Belvoir, Va.; two small granddaughters, one sister, Mrs. Harold Goodwin, of Rose Valley, Philadelphia, Pa., and three brothers, Hugh and John White of Guilford College, and William Alpheus White, Washington, D. C.

The funeral service for Mrs. Edwards was held on Saturday, November 25, in the New Garden Friends Meeting House at Guilford College. The service was in charge of the former pastor, Dr. Russell Branson, and included the reading of the Scripture by Rev. Charles Thomas, present pastor; a prayer by Dr. Clyde Milner, president of Guilford College; and tributes by Dr. Raymond Binford, who was Mrs. Edwards' beloved professor of Biology when she was a student at Guilford College, and Miss Margaret Edwards, Head of the Department of Home Economics at Woman's College. Dr. Binford paid tribute to Mrs. Edwards as a searching and enthusiastic student of science and as a beloved and active member of the Guilford College community. From Miss Margaret Edwards' tribute to Mrs. Edwards we quote:

"I wish to say a few words in deep appreciation and in fond memory of our colleague and friend, Flora White Edwards. These can only be simple words because 'Flo White' as we knew her at The Woman's College, loved simplicity.

"'Flo White' was a beautiful woman in countenance, in character, in the things she said and the things she did for others. She was a radiant person of rare charm and many talents that endeared her to all who knew her. She was the warm and unusual combination of vivacity, simplicity, humility and, at times, timidity.

MRS. FLORA WHITE EDWARDS

"She was a wonderful teacher. She believed so passionately in the scientific truths of nutrition and their importance to human welfare and she knew these facts so well and she taught them so simply that they became everyday living experiences to her students. Through her simple stories, her good humor and her common sense, her students caught her enthusiasm for these truths.

"We will always remember 'Flo White' as one who loved the vividness of nature's colors and the traceries of the green in the spring — the beautiful, the simple and the natural things of life.

"She enjoyed her home and she liked to share it with others. She would always bring the beautiful of the outdoors into her home with either window views of the outdoors from the inside or the golden leaves of the outdoors into the house. We will always remember her warm, genuine hospitality. As The Prophet says,

'In the sweetness of friendship there is laughter and sharing in pleasures and sadness and the heart finds its morning and is refreshed.'

"We will always remember 'Flo White's' quiet devotion to the memory of her husband, her loving and proud devotion to her daughter, Betty Phil, and her devotion to her mother and father, her sister and her brothers.

"The past several years have been hard and sad years for her, her family and her friends to see her spirit slip and her body weaken under the strain of her load of years. But 'Flo White' was a stouthearted and courageous woman. She gave unsparingly, unselfishly and without thought of herself until the last.

"We at the Woman's College will have treasured memories of a dear friend, a devoted co-worker, a great teacher, a lovely homemaker and a wonderful mother. She made life richer for all who knew her. One can truly say she loved life and people. She lived her religious faith by living and working for others and she has left a rich heritage of goodness to her loved ones. Her life was a true benediction.'

Other generations have faced other threats from totalitarianism of various sorts. The crucial fact of our time is that there are now two worlds — one dominated by Communism and the other led by the spirit of freedom.

There should no longer be any question in the minds of any of those who believe in the dignity of the individual and in what we know as freedom that Communism is an enemy of both. Indeed, it should be clear to those with open minds that Communism is committed to the denial of both, as well as to the extinguishment of religion except where expediency dictates a certain amount of lip service to religion.

Recent events have indicated that, where subversion and infiltration do not promise success in accordance with the Soviet time tables, then there will be Soviet encouragement of military aggression. This probability, long suspected and now proven, demonstrates that Communism, in its self-generated dynamism, considers that the aim justifies any means.

It should be clear to those who accept as we do the essential dignity of man, the search for truth, freedom of inquiry, and the right of worship, that to encourage Communism is to abandon these things and embrace its dogma. Indeed, believers in truth and freedom and those who have true faith must enlist themselves in the cause of combatting Communism.

There has been much talk about freedom. Indeed, my own use of the word has been prolific. May I suggest that freedom in its true meaning is the sense of an alternative: the opportunity to make a choice.

This, of course, implies in some cases a right, in some cases a power, in some cases a privilege. But these manifestations of freedom must in every case be accompanied by an obligation, a duty or a responsibility.

The sense of an alternative, therefore, must carry with it the awareness of the consequences of electing the alternative. This is our price for freedom, voluntarily paid.

Communism discourages alternatives. The restraints we know as duties, obligations and responsibilities are imposed by individuals upon themselves or by the influences of a free society upon its members; in the Communist state they assume the form of force, wielded by the state.

We are in a decisive struggle for the loyalties and hearts of men; a struggle between Stalinism on the one hand, and the forces of kindness and decency and humanity and character on the other.

Because a university in its very nature is committed to preserve what Communism would destroy, it would seem that the very weight of its free influences would render impotent any Communists it might unwittingly, or otherwise, be harboring. It would not seem that an individual, or even a small group of them could harm an institution or endanger its reputation, because of countering pressures.

But the closed mind will not yield, and the Communist mind is a closed mind. And for the reason that, often, this insidious influence does not manifest itself, the countering pressures cannot come into play. The healthful rays of sunlight have little effect upon the underside of an anchored rock.

Frequently academic freedom, which must be preserved at all costs, has been used as a cloak to give a sort of immunity to Communists and their side-car passengers. I cannot believe that firmness toward Communists, prudently exercised, violates the principle of unfettered research, and the pursuit of truth. I cannot believe that any university must reach into the ranks of those who are disloyal to American principles to develop a dedicated, independent faculty.

My own position should be made very clear. We shall not provide asylums for those who would extinguish the lights of liberty. Indeed, Communists are not welcome at any of our three institutions.

We shall not knowingly allow any campus to become a workshop, or laboratory, or training ground for the operations of those who are committed to the destruction of American cultures and institutions.

This having been said, it must be added that in our institutions, as should be the case everywhere, we shall approach the problem sensibly and with restraint. We shall not be governed by hysteria. We shall not persecute the innocent, nor malign the clearly misunderstood. And we shall be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt.

I have perhaps overdwelt on this matter. Communism, to the extent that it does exist in our institutions, is far from being our major concern. Deal with it, we will. But we in the Consolidated University must not become over-absorbed with it.

Although consolidation has been a living reality for almost a generation, and the students at the three institutions probably cannot remember Woman's College, State College and the University at Chapel Hill as anything but elements of the Consolidated University, this occasion today marks the first time an individual has been inaugurated as President of the Consolidated University. Therefore, in a very real sense none of my distinguished predecessors, upon taking the oath, faced the broad challenge or unlimited opportunity presented today.

Not all of the intricate problems attendant upon unification have been solved, and shifting circumstances constantly present new ones. However, that man of wide renown, Frank Porter Graham, whom I succeed at this hour skillfully chartered the course and guided the University through nearly two decades of successful consolidation, in the spirit and the letter of unity, envisioned by O.

Max Gardner, the father of consolidation; with benefit and increase to each of the institutions; with enhancing individual prestige for each; and with greater collective service to the State and region. To him should go credit for the most difficult and delicate part of the great new undertaking, accomplished without charter, and primarily through conviction, courage, and masterful human relations.

But no roll call, however short, would be complete without the name of William D. Carmichael, Jr., Controller for 10 years and Acting President for a year and a half. His efforts and accomplishments, largely unheralded, have been among the most significant contributions to these institutions in their history. I wish to express the state's indebtedness to him, and my own word of appreciation and esteem.

I recognize that our people, through their legislature, have decreed that consolidation be a fact in our State life; beyond that I am unconditionally and irrevocably and enthusiastically committed in my own view to the wisdom and necessity of consolidation.

While the action of the General Assembly in "merging" the three institutions was born perhaps of the incidents of the depression of the early thirties, nevertheless, I feel that there was vision in this move which went beyond the aim to conserve the precious dollars of a state in severe financial straits. Whatever the faith at that time, consolidation should now no longer be considered as an instrument of economy, but more as the most effective way to mobilize and utilize the resources of the State available for education in the fields in which it is the privilege and purpose of these institutions to serve.

Consolidation has proved its worth, and has begun to meet the vision of its architects. Its accomplishments should be measured in terms not of providing the cheapest kind of higher education, but of establishing a base for the best.

We will attempt to complete and maintain a firm and practical implementation of the purpose of allocation of functions within the University itself. There shall be no unnecessary duplication, but we shall not so blindly follow the theory of division of function as to deny any one of our three institutions the opportunity to accomplish the full mission assigned to it within its sphere.

We promise to the people of this State that, within the Consolidated University itself, mission and function will be under constant scrutiny.

It is suggested that the next move of the State in the field of organization of State institutions of higher learning would be to examine missions and functions of other state institutions, in the light of need, resources, and conservation of effort.

The Consolidated University of North Carolina, supported as it is primarily by the people of the State, is clearly and unmistakably a state organism; and its constituency is made up of the people of the State. Unlike private and denominational institutions whose role and obligation are different, the national and international obligations of a state university come only through its leadership.

This Consolidated University touches every man, woman and child in the state, rich or poor, planter or tenant, executive or worker. As it serves them, and as it guides and leads, and as it challenges their aspirations and hopes, they should be made to feel even more than they do that it is their Woman's College, their State College, and their University at Chapel Hill. This should include even those who are identified with other institutions.

For four years as a student and for 20 years as an alumnus, I have known, of course, as all students and alumni do, "What's wrong with the University." While I never aspired to have the responsibility of correcting these things, I was sure that I knew the answers. There are today thousands of students and many more thousands of alumni and alumnae who also know the answers. I welcome their assistance.

It is fair to say that in the two weeks in which I have been in the office of the President, notwithstanding my awareness over a period of years, that substantial sums of money were being made available to the Consolidated University. I have only begun to realize the magnitude and breadth and number of services being rendered by our three institutions to the people of the State. I shall not take time to enumerate them here. But because of their immense importance to an appraisal of the institution, I shall have them enumerated in the printed proceedings of these ceremonies.

I feel very keenly my responsibility as President of the University, which runs to the people of the State through the Trustees and the Legislature. It is a total responsibility and, like any other responsibility, cannot be delegated in whole or part.

As President of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, I shall in no way seek to, avoid piece or parcel of responsibility. On the other hand, I intend to make broad grants of authority, which can be delegated. These delegations, of course, will run to the Controller for business and fiscal affairs and to the Chancellors for administration of their respective institutions to assure that the administrative integrity of these institutions may be preserved. This is important. They shall have my support and full backing, but no head of an organization can escape the ultimate consequences of his acts or the acts or omissions of his associates.

Especially at this time are these delegations important in an educational sense. It should be evident, and I for one shall not attempt to conceal the fact, that the new President of the Consolidated University of North Carolina has demonstrable limitations, especially in the matter of academic experience.

This weakness in the end may prove to be a blessing. For out of the awareness of deficiency, there springs a resolution that it not be visited upon the Consolidated University. The President will — and must in the beginning — look to the Chancellors for the scholastic excellence of their respective institutions.

I regret on such an occasion as this to make so personal an address. These remarks of mine bear slight resemblance to the inaugural addresses of my illustrious predecessors through the years, but it would be out of character for me to talk at this time about integration, emphasis, and organization in the fields of learning.

The proper balance of the curricula, the division of internal academic missions, the delicate matters of teaching jurisdiction, all of these things must for the time being engage my attention through the Chancellors. They are the academic vice presidents, and shall have not only my full sympathy, but the benefit of my energies. You will understand that none of us will be content with mediocrity. In this we are in solemn covenant.

The President should make it abundantly clear — by conduct — that his responsibilities and interest run equally and without preference to each of the three institutions that comprise the Consolidated University.

The President, with the aid of the Chancellors, must interpret the institutions to the people of the State and must somehow stay close enough to the people to translate their aspirations and desires and needs into action on the part of the University as a whole. Inasmuch as the University is a part of the State and the State is a part of the University, he must go further and interpret for those citizens beyond the borders of North Carolina the State and its institutions.

The President of the University should constantly strive to keep the institution out of politics, with one important exception. It should be the duty of the President to interest himself on every occasion and under any circumstance in the furtherance of the cause of education, generally. But he must do more than profess allegiance. He must give to it whatever qualities of leadership he possesses, with vigor and consecration.

This means, of course, that he cannot stand aloof from the active arena when the blow he might strike for education could determine the outcome. To this extent and to this extent alone should he engage in political activity at the local, state, or national level.

It has become my conviction that a statement of intention in this respect is important, for the reason that regardless of his motive, the head of an educational institution cannot take a public position as an individual — his actions inescapably commit his institution, which becomes automatically the inheritor of all public utterances, all overt conduct.

The University must concern itself with public education, and the course and direction which public education takes, because the University is the very capstone of our State system. This is true not only in fact, but by design, inasmuch as our founding fathers, provided by constitution for "one or more universities" long before the State assumed responsibility for the public schools.

But there are other reasons why the head of the University must, in the execution of his own direct responsibilities, devote his energies to broadening and strengthening the educational base in the State. No institution can rise above the level of the students who come into its embrace, regardless of the quality of its faculty, and the effectiveness of its administration; its excellence will be limited always by the capacity and preparation of those young minds for whose development and training the State has undertaken to provide. In our particular instances, the public schools furnish us 90 percent of our student bodies.

Thus we lend our support and ingenuity and energy to bring about even greater progress than we have witnessed in the last generation, from the high schools down, and from the primary grades up. The University can provide stimulus, incentive, and leadership.

In this cause we will stand shoulder to shoulder with other institutions both public and private. Indeed, we will cooperate fully with them in the common crusade to bring about a healthier, happier, wiser, and more prosperous citizenry.

One continuing task of the President is constantly to appraise the worth of his University. Must he not think about the physical plant, in terms of how it is used rather than its dollar cost? Must he not judge the faculties in terms of the extent to which they are effectively engaged in teaching and research within the limitations of time and resources, and not in numbers or past renown? Must he not measure the student body by its sense of purpose and mission, rather than its size? Is not the true value of the library its traffic, and not the number of its books? Material possession alone is no indication of worth; the important question is how we use what we have.

The worth of our University clearly is to be measured in part by the multitude of services it renders to the people of the State and region. But it is also measured in terms of the young people we give back to the state. Are they good homemakers, teachers, professional and business women? Are they well trained lawyers and doctors, business men and workers? Are they masters of machines and the land? Are they — in short — good citizens, willing and able to exercise the leadership we have sought to prepare them for? Can they relate what they have been taught of the past to the demands and challenges of the present and future and thus adjust themselves in a world in which human adjustment has become one of the difficult tasks of men?

As we measure our obligations to the common weal, we must understand the limitations of the commonwealth.

Our ambitions for education cannot be met by theory or hope, but must take into account the facts.

We must recognize our own limitations, not in order to explain our weaknesses, but more for the purpose of exposing our problems, the nature of their solution, and charting the course that lies ahead of us.

This is an arresting fact, but we must understand it: In 1949 North Carolina ranked 44th among the states of the union in per capita income. That statistic, of course, speaks volumes.

It would not be fair, however, to fail to point out our progress in this respect in the past two decades. Our 1949 per capita income payments were 276 percent of the 1929 level. Only two states in the union had a greater increase than North Carolina.

Many of our citizens have in the past, I fear, sought refuge in and taken comfort from a description given us a few years ago by a famous American: "The best balanced state in the Union." It should be apparent to us that the level at which we balance is the important thing, and a few humble statistics may serve to indicate how serious our internal imbalances are.

While North Carolina ranks 4th among the states in total farm crop income, it stands 29th in total income from livestock and the products of livestock. This situation is perhaps better dramatized by pointing out that 80 percent of income to the farmer is derived from crops and only 20 percent from livestock and its products. This is the lowest percentage of any state in the union. Unprecedented progress, happily, is being made in this area, but it must be intensified through better marketing facilities, processing plants and the like. Another appalling fact is that all food processed in North Carolina does not equal 5 percent of the retail food sales in the state.

In industry 75 percent of the productivity of the State is in tobacco and textiles. Twelve percent is represented by furniture, leaving, of course, only thirteen percent from all other types of manufacturing.

Add to these figures the fact that this is a State with considerable underemployment among our one million six hundred thousand employable population.

The answer and the challenge clearly emerge: diversification in both agriculture and industry must be our watchword.

Our task, of course, is not to produce less crops, but to enlarge upon livestock and its products; not to manufacture less tobacco, textiles, and furniture, but to unharass our physical and human resources in other types of industry.

I should like to touch briefly upon the situation in which we have found ourselves. Following the great internal struggle of the 1860's, this area was defeated and occupied. There was then no Point IV program, no technical assistance programs, no Marshall Plan, no government aid and relief for occupied areas. There was then no effort to determine what could be done in the way of the use of public funds, for the development of "underdeveloped" — or even devastated — areas. One must wonder whether, with comparable aid now given by an enlightened government to conquered territories, North Carolina might not have been 4th instead of 44th among the states in material wealth.

However, the time of recrimination is past. We must build on the base which we have been able to establish for ourselves, by ourselves, and for ourselves.

In many areas, the opportunities seem almost boundless. There are untouched latent riches in the land. Perhaps our greatest promise lies in the development of our unsurpassed forest resources, as we enter the cellulose age. There are unharassed water power and unexploited mineral resources. And there is the greatest asset of all: our reservoir of heart and brain and muscle.

Because this is America, which provides the way, we can do these things if we have the will; because we still live in a free market economy, with a free enterprise society, buttressed as it must be with a strong social consciousness, we need not content ourselves with a distribution of deficiencies, but can participate in the glorious adventure of increasing productivity for the benefit of all.

I believe that a commonwealth with the wisdom to open the first state university can have the initiative, resoluteness and energy to take advantage of its manifold opportunities. Our population, 12th among the states, is evenly distributed in the various areas between the mountains and the sea, which is not without its significance in an atomic era. Each region has its own peculiar resources. There should not be a backward area in the state.

There are here things that money cannot provide — an equable climate, a loyal, eager, homogeneous citizenry, and the magic of an indomitable spirit. These must be marshalled and directed towards the fulfillment of our dream of happiness and well being for our citizens. Inescapably and happily the Consolidated University has had in the past and must continue in the future to assume a central role. It can promote understanding; it can teach and train our youth to do the things that need to be done; it can expose and challenge. First of all, perhaps it must inculcate in our people the desire to accomplish great works.

It must point the way to happiness of an enlightened and responsible citizenship in the contented use of leisure time and the sensible enjoyment of the benefits to come.

It can and will lead, and as each of its component parts goes about performing its own high mission, each of these institutions can, I believe, become pre-eminent in its own field, and collectively one of the foremost universities of the world.

As President of the Consolidated University, and in dedicating myself to the many tasks at hand, I have a word for the students. You shall have the support of the University administration in all reasonable efforts to enjoy the fruits of your labor as students. You shall have the encouragement of the institution in making full use of all the opportunities offered you.

We will attempt to guarantee the search for truth and the protections which an open mind should enjoy.

We recognize that the capacity for self-discipline is essential to the educated man or woman, and that student self-government is a logical corollary of education for democratic citizenship. This concept has a long and significant tradition in our State and in the Consolidated University.

But we must remind ourselves that the effectiveness of student government must finally be measured by student conduct, the extent of student responsibility, and the excellence of student character. These are the standards by which the quality of student life will be judged.

Also this tradition, this heritage of the University's honor and reputation, is not solely the responsibility or the privilege of any one student generation. It is a trust you share with students who have gone before, with alumni, the faculty, parents, trustees.

It is under the responsibilities of the officers of the administration that these duties and interests are combined. Thus the President, having the overall responsibility, may not neglect his duty nor renounce his residual authority in this important phase of university life.

I have a word for the Faculties, also. The administration believes in freedom of inquiry and the right of unshackled research.

The administration believes also that the worth of a faculty is not to be measured solely in terms of the productivity of research, but that great teaching is vital. We will rejoice in all the prestige you can muster, but we will not encourage the faculties to sacrifice sound teaching for outside acclaim.

We shall exact high standards, but you shall have our unmitigated support in reaching and maintaining these standards, within the limits of our resources.

And I wish to add my personal appreciation for what you have been, and for what you are.

I have a word for the Trustees. I accept in all humility the great charge you have given me. I pledge to you that as long as I serve the people of the State in this position I will give the utmost of my energies and of my mind, my heart, and my spirit. I shall, of course, hope for your support. I shall not expect that we shall agree always, but I assure you that I shall do what I think is right always. I shall not temporize, compromise, or buy support with expediency. If I find that I am wrong, I shall not hesitate to admit it. But as long as my judgment and my conscience tell me that I am right, I shall pursue the course that seems to me the proper one.

I say this in no sense of belligerency, but not having sought the post to which you have elected me, I feel that I am entitled to embrace rectitude as my only guide and mentor.

I have a word for the visiting dignitaries, delegates, distinguished guests, and other friends of the University from beyond the borders of our State. This is the only reference of an academic nature I will have made today. It is in the way of friendly instruction and concerns itself with the appropriate pronunciation of the name of our beloved State. We are not the Consolidated University of North Carolina. We are the Consolidated University of North Carolina.

I have a word for the people of the State. This is your University. You are entitled to look to it for service and for the training and for the enriching of the minds of your sons and daughters. Your University will not be serving its purpose in this crucial point of world history unless it not only produces leaders but gives leadership. Your University should challenge your aspirations and enlarge your ambitions. If it does not do these things, it will have failed.

And finally, I have a word for the hearts and souls of those of us who have the high mission of guiding these institutions as we move forward into the second half of this century.

Our State, like America in the world, has assumed a position of leadership in the South. We must measure up to this challenge. It is no longer good enough to say that our University is the best in the South.

There is much to be done in North Carolina and in the South. We face multitudinous problems of unprecedented difficulty and of unparalleled complexity and of raw newness, requiring the application of much wisdom and compassion and firmness.

In displaying our new courage and new understanding as we keep our appointment with destiny, we must treat old habits of thought and old patterns of behavior reverently, as well as realistically, so that we may preserve the finest of the region. As we turn our faces to the best of the future, we must not turn our backs on the best of the past.

Most of all we must overcome any tendency or willingness to be content with less than the best.

We are told, and I believe, that our institutions have an influence of critical importance, both because of their positions in history and prestige, and because of their awareness of their immense responsibilities and their resolution in meeting them. We are told that the good minds everywhere respect the best qualities of these institutions.

The remainder of the country, East and North and West — indeed the South — look to us "to interpret the best of the South for the South, and the best of the South for all of America, as well as the best of the world for our own State and region." They look to us for inspiration and direction in bringing about the increase in spiritual, intellectual and physical resources necessary for our region to take its destined place in America.

Despite our limitations, perhaps no other university has such a responsibility — or such an opportunity.

How we meet our responsibility and seize our opportunity can be determined only in part by our ability to see where we have been and where we are. How we go and what we will become will depend upon our hearts as well as our minds.

In our hearts and souls lie the promise and the fulfillment: the dream and the reality; the hope and the faith; in our hearts and souls can these things meet and become one.

May heaven's blessings attend the hearts and souls of this leadership.

Mary Jones Arrington (1874-1950) died at her home in Rocky Mount. Miss Daisy Bailey Waitt '95 wrote the following tribute to Miss Arrington:

"Among the students who registered at the State Normal and Industrial College in 1892 when it opened its doors with Dr. Charles D. McIver as president, none was more outstanding than Mary Jones Arrington. For the three years prior to her graduation in 1895, she was a leader among the students and in all the activities of the young school as well as in her class room work.

"Immediately after her graduation, when schools began in the fall, Mary began her work in public education and taught in various capacities until 1920. Her work began in Rocky Mount and she held other positions in Faison, Burlington, and Raleigh. Her successful teaching led to supervisory work in Franklin County. Later she was a member of the Farm Life School in Moore County and did some work in teacher training. In addition to her classroom work, she took part in the Institute for Teachers in the summers.

"In 1897-1898 she returned to the State Normal College where she served as registrar, and was back again later for graduate work in the Practice School. Those were the days before specialization, when a good teacher's calls were in more than one field.

"Not only was Mary interested in school affairs and school organizations but also in state, county, and community organizations. Among her interests were the State Literary and Historical Association and the Library Association.

"Mary's interest in the Alumnae Association, of which she was President 1896-1897, was never failing and no one rejoiced more in the growth from 'The Normal' to the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina."

Margaret Avery Gash died September 9, 1950, at her home in Brevard after a brief illness.
